

A CONFERENCE REQUEST...

An Unrehearsed Flash Mob!

Dear My Favorite Principal,

Imagine this: You walk into the classroom, full of energy, ready to inspire young minds. Suddenly, a student starts flossing (the dance, not their teeth), another decides now is the perfect time to argue about why Pluto should still be a planet, and someone else is dramatically reenacting yesterday's recess drama like they're auditioning for Broadway.

Sound familiar?

That's why I NEED to attend the Teaching is Like an Unrehearsed Flash Mob conference this summer in Alexandria, LA, on July 23-24. It's all about understanding and managing student behavior, turning chaos into engagement, and keeping our classrooms from feeling like an unscripted improv show.

Here's why this conference is a must:

- It's two days of expert-led sessions focused on practical, real-world classroom behavior strategies.
- It aligns perfectly with our school's goal of improving student engagement and behavior management.
- I'll bring back fresh ideas, strategies, and possibly some dance moves (if necessary) to share with our team.

The logistics (because I know you like the details):

- Hotel blocks are reserved for attendees.
- Schools can pay with a PO, Eventbrite via the website, or use Title II funds.
- Investing in this conference means investing in our students, our classrooms, and let's be honest—our collective sanity.

Can I count on your support to make this happen? I'd love the opportunity to attend, learn, and bring back valuable strategies to strengthen our school community.

Let me know what you think—I'm happy to discuss it further (or stage a dramatic plea if necessary). Thanks for considering this request, and I promise, if I go, I won't turn our next staff meeting into a flash mob... unless you're interested?

Sincerely,
